Session description:

The Paris Agreement and the Agenda 2030 present many overlapping and complementary topics that pave the way towards transformative policy. They rightfully recognise the local levels as being of critical importance in moving towards sustainable development. Indigenous and local authorities are key actors when it comes to the implementation of these agreements: both assume important role model functions in their territories. This event will explore the contribution of the local level in implementing international agreements and take a deeper look at the opportunities for local authorities and indigenous peoples to learn from each other. Light snacks and refreshments will be offered.
